

I understand that the FCC has introduced an LPFM broadcast service that could take priority over the current FM translator service. As a listener to K-LOVE radio, I must object to the possibility of an LPFM eliminating the K-LOVE signal. I enjoy the consistent quality of contemporary Christian music that K-LOVE provides, and I fear the advent of LPFM stations would not provide the same radio "environment." There are few enough radio stations that can be listened to by an entire family, regardless of age. Though there seems to be some debate over the value of national broadcasting, it is assuring to know that there is at least one station I know that I and my family can enjoy wherever we happen to be traveling. Such can only be the case if LPFM service and FM translator service have equity.
